FEBRUARY

February is a month where people are focused on LOVE, not divorce.

And how can your local neighborhood divorce attorney help – with a Reconciliation Agreement. People get divorced for many reasons: they fall out of love, financial difficulties, affairs, disagreements about children, stress, lack of intimacy and so on and so on. Attorneys don't have a lot to do with the reasons people get divorced. Sometimes it's relevant to the divorce process, but often it isn't. We listen to your reasons and what you ultimately want out of the divorce and move ahead with filing a Complaint for Divorce. The cause of action in most of the divorce complaints we file is "irreconcilable differences."

We then proceed with the divorce, which is a challenging process for most people. People have to gather up financial information, make decisions about the marital home (to be sold; or not to be sold), decide with whom and where the children are going to live and a myriad other items. Often the divorce process involves more communication between the couple than they've had in the last several years of their marriage. For a few couples the process itself, and the communication, make them realize they don't want to get divorced. This isn't a problem – if you don't want to get divorced both people withdraw their Complaints and Counterclaims for Divorce and continue with their lives. Hopefully happier than before.

A Reconciliation Agreement is a great tool for couples who have gone so far as to file a Complaint for Divorce and realized divorce is not for them, but they have concerns. A Reconciliation Agreement is a contract between the reconciling couple that acknowledges that they want to continue to be married but addresses the division of assets, support and custody issues in the event that they in the future decide to divorce. One of the benefits of entering into a Reconciliation Agreement is both parties are in the right frame of mind to reach decisions that are going to benefit the whole family in the future in case of a divorce.

A direct and compelling headline

Pre-Nuptial Agreements

Pre-Nuptial Agreements are a great tool for couples who are planning to get married. Much like Reconciliation Agreements they can address issues that might arise in the future while everyone is still on friendly terms. Planning for the future is rarely a mistake whether in love or in money.
